Question: Critique the ecological consequences of losing an apex predator like the Bengal tiger.

- Answer Key: Losing an apex predator triggers a trophic cascade. Herbivore populations explode, overconsuming vegetation and devastating forest saplings. This causes soil erosion, stream degradation, and loss of habitat for birds and insects, destroying overall ecosystem health.

Question: Deconstruct the biological mechanisms of feline camouflage and acoustic stealth.

- Answer Key: Camouflage relies on disruptive coloration, where vertical black stripes disrupt body symmetry against vegetation. Acoustic stealth relies on soft plantar pads that deform over rough terrain, absorbing mechanical energy and dampening footfall acoustics.

Question: Evaluate the effectiveness of Project Tiger after 50 years of implementation.

- Answer Key: Project Tiger successfully increased India's wild tiger count from under 1,800 in 1973 to over 3,000 today. It expanded protected territory into 50+ reserves, proving that political willpower combined with scientific habitat management can reverse species decline.

Question: Analyze how human population growth drives deforestation and human-tiger conflict.

- Answer Key: Human demographic pressure expands agriculture and urban infrastructure into forest corridors. This fragments continuous habitats, forces tigers into human-dominated landscapes, and leads to retaliatory killings and severe human-animal conflict.

Question: Examine the concept of 'Umbrella Species' in conservation biology.

- Answer Key: Tigers require large intact forest ecosystems (100+ sq km per tiger). By conserving enough forest to protect tigers, conservationists automatically protect thousands of sympatric plant, insect, bird, and mammal species living under that same 'umbrella'.
