Question: Describe the early life, education, and arrival of Dr. Verghese Kurien in Anand, Gujarat.

Answer Key: Dr. Verghese Kurien, who became universally known as the 'Milkman of India', was born on November 26, 1921, in Kerala. He pursued his higher education in mechanical engineering in India and subsequently traveled to the United States on a government scholarship to study dairy engineering. Upon returning to India, he was assigned by the government to work at a government creamery in Anand, a small town in Gujarat. Although Kurien initially planned to complete his bond period and leave for a city career, his encounters with local farmers changed his life path. In Anand, he met Tribhuvandas Patel, a selfless local leader who was organizing dairy farmers to sell milk directly without exploitative middlemen. Inspired by Patel's mission, Dr. Kurien decided to stay in Anand and dedicate his technical skills to building a cooperative dairy movement.

Question: Explain the formation of the Amul dairy cooperative and how Dr. Kurien transformed it into a famous national brand.

Answer Key: In 1946, the dairy farmers of Anand registered the Kaira District Co-operative Milk Producers' Union, which became famously known as Amul (Anand Milk Union Limited). Before Amul, private milk contractors paid farmers unfairly low prices and refused milk during flush seasons. Dr. Kurien introduced modern dairy engineering technology and professional management practices to Amul. Under his guidance, Amul established village collection centers with transparent fat testing, built modern processing plants, and successfully manufactured milk, butter, cheese, ghee, and ice cream. By providing high quality at affordable prices, Amul became a household name across India, proving that a farmer-owned cooperative could compete with multinational corporations.

*Question: Explain how Dr. Kurien eliminated the exploitation of small dairy farmers by middlemen.

Answer Key: Before Dr. Kurien's work, private milk contractors (middlemen) held a monopoly in Anand. They manipulated milk measurement, paid low prices, and refused to buy milk during winter flush seasons when supply was high. Dr. Kurien helped establish village-level cooperative collection societies owned by the farmers. Each morning and evening, farmers brought milk to their local center where fat content was tested transparently, and cash was paid immediately based on quality. By processing excess milk into long-life butter and milk powder, Amul guaranteed that every drop of milk produced by farmers was bought at a fair price year-round.

*Question: Describe the technical breakthrough of producing milk powder from buffalo milk achieved by Dr. Kurien's team.

Answer Key: In the 1950s, international dairy experts claimed that it was scientifically impossible to convert buffalo milk into skimmed milk powder and condensed milk because of its high fat content and chemical structure. Dr. Kurien and his brilliant engineering colleague H. M. Dalaya refused to accept this limitation. Through persistent experimentation in Anand, they developed a world-first spray-drying process that successfully converted buffalo milk into high-quality milk powder and condensed milk. This technical breakthrough was crucial for India, where buffaloes produced the vast majority of milk, allowing Amul to process surplus milk and eliminate dependence on foreign imports.
